Such audit may be conducted no more than once per quarter, at the Supplier's expense, and this right shall be exercised with reasonable prior written notice and be conducted in such a manner as not to substantially interfere with the Customer's normal conduct of business; if any of the audits referred to in clause 5.6.4 reveal that the number of Authorised Users that have access to the Services within the Metered Period is greater than the number of User Subscriptions, and outside of the limits defined within our Fair Usage Policy, then without prejudice to the Supplier's other rights, the Customer shall promptly either withdraw access from the extraneous users or request to purchase additional User Subscriptions.

5.10 Beta software

5.10.1 The purpose of beta software is to allow willing users to get early-access to technology while it is still in development. This is done with the understanding that the software is not yet judged by the software vendor, i.e. the Supplier, to be production-ready. As such, it is in the very nature of beta software that it may include bugs, errors or be in some way incomplete or flawed. It is important that anyone using beta software does so in full knowledge and acceptance of the possible risks associated with it, and act with the appropriate level of care.

5.10.2 Whenever we release software that is 'beta' we will ensure it is clearly marked. Customers are under no obligation to use beta software whatsoever.

5.10.3 The 'beta' status can be assigned at different levels of our technology:

- Product. A whole product version can be given the 'beta' status.

- Feature. A specific individual feature within a broader production-status product can be given the 'beta' status. In this scenario, the feature would always be disabled by default and marked as 'beta' within our administrative portal, Iris. It is therefore the choice of the registered admins within our portal whether they wish to enable the beta feature or not.
- API end-point. Often this will accompany a specific beta-feature or beta-product, but it is also possible for us to release beta API-endpoints that do not directly tie into specific products or features. Beta API endpoints are marked as such within our API documentation.

5.10.4 There is no pre-determined length of time a product, feature or API end-point will be assigned the 'beta' status. It may only be for a few weeks or conversely many months or even indefinitely. However, it is our intention that the 'beta' process is a temporary stage between development and production that allows us to receive real-world feedback on our software in order to maximise our confidence that the software satisfies the requirements of our customers and partners. As such, while we make no guarantees, it is likely 'beta' software will become 'production' software after a few months of beta testing.

5.10.5 The Customer acknowledges, that should the Subscribed Services include any beta software in particular, this could have serious bugs and/or vulnerabilities in it and agrees to use such with appropriate caution. In particular, the Customer acknowledges and agrees to not use beta software within live production environments where it is understood that faults in the software could cause wider damage.

5.10.6 The Customer shall take full responsibility for any loss or damage caused as a direct result of their use of and accessing any beta software outside of the parameters of any advice and/or guidance provided by the Supplier, as set out in this clause, and in writing from time to time.

6. Supplier's responsibilities

6.1 The Supplier undertakes that the Services will be performed substantially in accordance with the Documentation and the Subscribed Services and Support Services will be performed with reasonable skill and care in a manner consistent with general industry standards.

6.2 The undertaking at clause 6.1 shall not apply to the extent of any non-conformance which is caused by use of the Subscribed Services contrary to the Supplier's instructions, or modification or alteration of the Subscribed Services by any party other than the Supplier or the Supplier's duly authorised contractors or agents. If the Subscribed Services and/or the Support Services do not conform with the foregoing undertaking, the Supplier will, at its expense, use all reasonable commercial endeavours to correct any such non-conformance promptly, or provide the Customer with an alternative means of accomplishing the desired performance. Such correction or substitution constitutes the Customer's sole and exclusive remedy for any breach of the undertaking set out in Clause 6.1. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Supplier:

Any material functionality changes and/or removals of functionality to the existing Services would be made by prior written notice to the Customer. In the event of such termination the Customer shall receive a refund of any pre-paid Fees, relating to the remaining agreement period, on a pro-rata basis in respect of such terminated Services.

9.7 The Customer acknowledges that the Supplier shall be entitled to modify the features and functionality of the Services. The Supplier shall use reasonable endeavours to ensure that any such modification does not materially adversely affect the use of the relevant Subscribed Service(s) by the Supplier's customers generally. The Supplier may, without limitation to the generality of this clause 9.7, establish new limits on the Services (or any part), including limiting the volume of data which may be used, stored or transmitted in connection with the Service, remove or restrict application programming interfaces or make alterations to data retention periods, provided such changes are introduced by Update to the relevant impacted contractual documents.
